Form-Based Codes as Smart Growth Zoning

What are 'Form-Based Codes'? As defined by the Local Government Commission (LGC), form-based codes place primary emphasis on building type, dimensions, parking location and facade features, and less emphasis on segregating land use types. They stress the appearance of the streetscape over long lists of different use types. For more information about this burgeoning zoning trend, read the Michigan Association of Planning's "Smart Growth Tactics: Form-Based Codes."

Looking for online publishing and access assistance? If your community is already implementing a form-based code, or considering one, contact General Code to find out how we're helping other municipalities to publish their completed plans, accurately representing them electronically as part of their eCodes. Form-based codes or zoning plans (or even image-rich legislation) are hosted and maintained as they are intended to be graphically represented!

Social Media for Local Government

Is your municipality using YouTube to distribute information about your community or to promote it? Many local governments have set up official 'channels' to post board meetings, community profiles and more.

Need some inspiration? Check out the Civic Plus Blog that lists "5 Clever Examples of Local Government Using YouTube."
